Rewards and punishment

From Founder's Desk - Ms. Shruthi Karthik

"Rewards and punishments, to speak frankly are the desk of the soul, that is, a means of enslaving a child's spirit, and better suited to provoke than to prevent deformities".

Dr. Maria Montessori

Man, disciplined through liberty, begins to desire the true and only prize which will never belittle or disappoint him, - the birth of human power and liberty within that inner life of his form which his activities must spring.

Reward's and punishments are the worst enemies of the child's development.

Dr. Maria Montessori famously compared external behaviour to how a jockey treats a race horse.

"The jockey gives sugar to his horse before the race, but uses his spurs and whip when they're behind in the race". However, do any of these methods induce the animal to run fast and be proud like a horse of the plains.

Similarly, even for a child, rewards and punishments don't motivate, especially, when they are expected as a result or gain, can they be a motivating factor.

So, not surprisingly, I have noticed that to build intrinsic motivation in the child of the inner drive is sufficient to do it, not because of some external reason like a reward or threat.

Montessori approach is a holistic approach where each part is intrinsically linked.

To achieve this goal, it is therefore essential for children to first work on their own self-motivation.

- For example, if a child is constantly working, to impress the adult, and an adult decides to reward the child with a “Star”, this will bring results only in the immediate future and not help with the holistic development of the child.

To do something Positive or give some negative remarks merely for external purpose or consequences means not living one's own life but someone else's.

So, let's ask ourselves what do we want as adults, parents or educators, do we want to raise the children with an impact to their self-esteem and confidence?

An individual is disciplined when he is a master of himself, and can, therefore regulate his own conduct when it shall be necessary to follow some rule of life.

The child is a body which grows, and a soul which develops. We must neither mar nor stifle this mysterious power, but we must await from them the manifestations which we know will succeed one another.

Life is a superb goddess, always advancing, overthrowing the obstacles which environment places in the way of her triumph. This is the basic or fundamental truth, whether it be a question of species or individuals, there persists always the forward march of those victorious ones in whom the mysterious life force is strong and vital.

“The highest form of discipline is not obedience born of fear or reward, but responsibility born of understanding.”
